Simultaneously, I had the frame of a story in mind which would match that title. When my daughter Karin graduated from college, she and six friends (all male) sailed across the ocean from Connecticut to Ireland. "Mom!" she said. "We almost died!" Shortly after they'd relayed the "all-safe" message, they encountered a gale, much like the one in the book: it broke their booms, ripped their sails, and knocked out all their communications' equipment.
