Leslie Stein is one of the brightest lights of current day comics-making; her comics are very personal, both in her motivation to do them and the iconography she chooses to realize those stories. Fueled by insomnia and prompted by characters she encountered while tending bar or traveling. Like life, the whole deal is kind of heart breaking and yet tough. The book is not just an experiment, not just the result of a year's worth of creative output, but a record of one person's encounters with the desperation of loneliness as well as the warmth of meaningful connection.
