It is inconceivable that President Obama could learn anything from President Washington. They do not have similar characteristics. John Yoo, a former official at the Department of Justice, and author of Crisis and Command: A History of Executive Power from George Washington to George W. Bush, believes that “Washington saw the presidency on equal footing with Congress. While Congress would take the lead concerning domestic issues, the president would take charge concerning foreign affairs.” Yet, President Obama blatantly challenges the rule of law in the context of ObamaCare, his recess appointments, and his “Dream Act” implementation. Larson noted to American Thinker, “I call him the general contractor of the Constitution.”