The workers remained in the factories and the ruling class just waited until the movement exhausted itself. By the time the Left did get to break from the socialists and set up the Communist Party of Italy (PCd'I) at Livorno in 1921, the class movement was over, and the bourgeoisie was turning to fascism. The Party that was founded was created by the Left, and its first general secretary was the young Amadeo Bordiga. The result was that many communists who thought that parliament should be used as a tribune to gain publicity (but might not have seen it as the road to power) were hesitant about joining the party, and it not only meant that it was numerically smaller than it should have been, but emerged later than it should have. Finnish Workers' Central Election Committee was formed on February 24, 1922 by representatives of the SSTP, Finnish Trade Union Federation (SAJ), Social Democratic Youth League of Finland and Social Democratic Women's League of Finland. Election Committee set up 130 candidates, in all electoral constituencies. The SSTP received a total of 128,121 votes (14.8%) and 27 MPs (including 6 women). In 1922 the SSTP had 24,398 members and 706 basic organisations. The other Finnish parties called for the SSTP's abolition and its members were imprisoned on a regular basis. The United Socialist Party (Italian: Partito Socialista Unitario, PSU) was a socialist political party in Italy 1922-1930. The party was founded Filippo Turati and Giacomo Matteotti in November 1922 by the reformist wing of the Italian Socialist. The party was founded Filippo Turati and Giacomo Matteotti in November 1922 by the reformist wing of the Italian Socialist Party (PSI), after it had been expelled on October 1. A staunch opponent of Benito Mussolini and Fascism, it became the focus of attention after Matteott's assassination by the Fascist "Ceka" in June 1924 (an event which provoked the Aventine. Secession).
