Inside wood. First published in 1970. Subjects. The book reads fast and is full of first person accounts. At first, I was iffy about the interview structure of the book. I can see how it works as a defensive move -- everything is either corroborated or refuted right on the spot. (Though, who had the final edit, huh?) Switching constantly from one person to the next, though sometimes breaking the flow, mostly makes for a good back-and-forth. The biggest disagreements are around the publishing and the attempted reunions. Of course, I wasn't there (or I'd be in the book!) for recordings, but I favor Mustaine on this argument. There's perhaps some confusion around composition and performance. If the songs are written, then doing instrumentation of bass or drums in the studio is performance, not composing, in my interpretation. the epoch-making book that catalyzed the modern environmental movement and inspired the creation of Earth Day. Get closer to the truth of things through science. His love of nature never left him but, in a testament to Richard Feynman's timeless Ode to a Flower, was only magnified by the lucidity of his scientific training. Lanham writes: Evolution, gravity, change, and the dynamic transformation of field into forest move me. As I wander into the predawn dark of an autumn wood, I feel the presence of things beyond flesh, bone, and blood. My being expands to fit the limitlessness of the wild world. My senses flush to full and my heartbeat quickens with the knowledge that I am not alone. Nature. Social Issues. Fashion. When you hear the word masterpiece, you most likely think of some famous painting painted in the 15th or 16th century like the Mona Lisa. So it's always nice to know that unforgettable works of art are being created even today. Take, for example, Chinese artist Zheng Chunhu's breathtaking 12.2-meter-long (over 40 ft) wooden carving – it is a modern masterpiece of sculpture art. There are lots of things about Chunhu's beautiful sculpture that make it unforgettable. It has entered the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest continuous wood carving in the world.
