Of Hospitality Cultural Memory in the Present

By Jacques Derrida

Stanford University Press. Hardcover. Condition: New. 176 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 4.3in. x 0.8in. These two lectures by Jacques Derrida, Foreigner Question and Step of Hospitality, derive from a series of seminars on hospitality conducted by Derrida in Paris, January 1996. His seminars, in France and in America, have become something of an institution over the years, the place where he presents the ongoing evolution of his thought in a remarkable combination of thoroughly mapped-out positions, sketches of new material, and exchanges with students and interlocutors. As has become a pattern in Derrida’s recent work, the form of this presentation is a self-conscious enactment of its content. The book consists of two texts on facing pages. Invitation by Anne Dufourmantelle appears on the left (an invitation that of course originates in a response), clarifying and inflecting Derrida’s response on the right. The interaction between them not only enacts the hospitality under discussion, but preserves something of the rhythms of teaching. The volume also characteristically combines careful readings of canonical texts and philosophical topics with attention to the most salient events in the contemporary world, using hospitality as a means of rethinking a range of political and ethical situations. Therefore, successfully managing cultural diversity is becoming a challenging issue in the hospitality industry (Holaday, 2007). Line managers who supervise multicultural background workers directly face this challenge. Expatriate managers also need to deal with cross-cultural adjustment problems. However, many companies in the hospitality industry still encounter difficulties of effectively managing cultural differences. Discrimination and stereotypes coming from insufficient assumption of other culture still exist in the workplace, even among some management level managers. For example, regardless of the increased portion of minority employment, most of the minority employees are still at the entry or low-skilled level of the workforce. Because memory is not just an individual, private experience but is also part of the collective domain, cultural memory has become a topic in both historiography (Pierre Nora, Richard Terdiman) and cultural studies (e.g., Susan Stewart). These emphasize cultural memory’s process (historiography) and its implications and objects (cultural studies), respectively. Two schools of thought have emerged, one articulates that the present shapes our understanding of the past. The other assumes that the past shapes the present. Of Hospitality provides us with a glimpse of Jacques Derrida as not only the brilliant thinker and writer readers have long admired but as the masterful lecturer and pedagogue his students have long known. . . . Of Hospitality should find a welcome audience not only among faithful readers of Derrida but among all those who are open enough to hear the knock at their borders or their doors.

the present Self. The concept of cultural memory has opened the way to studying these processes at a collective level. More problematic is the migration of concepts between the individual and social levels when it comes to trauma studies. In the present volume, this fact is mirrored not only by the dedication of different sections to (clusters of) different disciplines (history, social sciences, psychology, literary and media studies) which have an expertise with regard to one specific level of cultural memory, but also by the incorporation of as many approaches as possible which go beyond those boundaries. Asian hospitality has gained a reputation for excellence in quality of facilities and services over the past decade. The unique, lovely ways of Asian hospitality spring from its strong historical and cultural background. Asian cultures and their peoples have special hand-making skills and are detail orientated which can be seen from the products produced and services provided by Asian organizations. Hospitality crosses cultural boundaries. It speaks a universal language of generosity between peoples of all types. Through hospitality, a hotel's unique brand culture inevitably unites guests under a common experience. Hospitality is diversity. Hospitality is a global profession. Tourism in the 21st Century has become defined by its professional opportunities on every corner of the planet. Employing more than 300 million people and representing 10.4% of the global economy ($8.8 Trillion annually), hospitality companies come in all sizes and types with opportunities in virtually every region on Earth. Therefore, cultural memory preserves the symbolic institutionalized heritage to which individuals resort to build their own identities and to affirm themselves as part of a group. This is possible because the act of remembering involves normative aspects, so that if you want to belong to a community, you must follow the rules of how and what to remember, as stated by the researcher. He also highlighted that, by working as a collective unifying force, cultural memory is considered a hazard by totalitarian regimes. This type of memory, built on traumatic episodes, intensifies in the 1990s, when the testimonies of the victims gain ground and several museums and memorials dedicated to symbolically perpetuate the past human rights violations open around the world.
