Living Beyond Loss helped me examine the dynamics in my own family system and gain insight into how I can be helpful to others grieving death beyond doing just a nice memorial service. This book addresses the hard deaths people endure: suicide, deaths of children, accidents, sudden deaths. The book is informative, true to life, and packed with great examples of people who have suffered through family loss and how they have dealt with it. I have recently lost loved ones and purchased the book out of curiosity and because I am seeking knowledge about the reactions and psychological trauma that my family has to deal with. Occupation-based intervention strategies for occupational therapists and scientists. Meaningful Living across the Lifespan. Occupation-Based Intervention Strategies for Occupational Therapists and Scientists. Moses N. Ikuguo and Nick Pollard. Occupations, including those of leisure and work, offer powerful means through which individuals and societies can be used to mediate perceptions of meaninglessness and offer the redemption alluded to above. We can have confidence in the power of occupations in helping us achieve the above stated objective based on our observation that when people die, they are often remembered in terms of the things they did with other people, and mementoes related to such things as sports affiliations or social, usually family, roles.
