The continuing development of the European Union (EU) is transforming policy and politics in its member countries, and possibly in an even larger number of potential members. This book offers a detailed investigation of the Europeanization of national environmental policy in ten western European countries since 1970. By blending state-of-the-art theories with fresh empirical material on the many manifestations of Europeanization, it sheds new light on the dynamics that are decisively reshaping national environmental policy. It also offers an original assessment of how far Europeanization has p Euroscepticism and the Return to Nationalism in the Wake of Accession as Part of the Europeanization Process in Central and Eastern Europe. The EU's influence in this case is not as active as it would be in, for example, the shaping of a member state or accession countries' environmental policy, where influence would largely stem from the acquis. Instead, it is an indirect process based on the fact that the EU is a determinant for policy and is playing an increasing role in national party systems, party politics, campaigning and elections.
