How fast you get your bachelor’s degree is really up to you (and the college you choose). To help you pick the right schools and programs, we’ve created a guide to give you the info you need to make the best choice for you. Choose a college with alternative credit options. Take accelerated classes online (6 week or 8 week). If these schools aren’t a good fit for you, then carefully check your college’s policies to see if these opportunities are available. Accelerated Online Classes – 6 Weeks or 8 Weeks? Accelerated online classes are the other way to knock off classes quickly. Until you get your degree, you may have to set aside things you used to do on the weekends, like watching movies or sports, hanging out with friends, and doing other leisure activities.

Create a System to Organize Notes & Insights. There’s a major difference between the “regurgitation” of undergraduate work (memorizing, understanding, and knowing) and the “application” of graduate work. It’s going to get hard. Be ready to fight off feelings of frustration. It’s a good idea to constantly remind yourself of why you’re getting your degree. When you’re feeling upbeat, get on your smart phone and set up a series of encouraging text reminders to pop up in the future, when you know your workload will be heavy. Mastery Is in Your Grasp. Getting a job is one thing, but getting the career you really want is going to take a little more legwork. So if you’re wondering how to get a good job, then look no further, these tips have you covered.Â The first step when figuring out how to get a good job is to put yourself in their shoes for a minute. Who would you hire if you were the boss? The funny part about this is the people you would expect to get the job may not fit the bill. Take someone who has an Ivy League education and put them up against someone who does not have a degree, but has tons of proven experience and a humble attitude, and I have to say I think I’d pick the latter 9 times out of 10. Remember, people hire people, not paper. When a manager is hiring someone to do a job they have two primary concerns.
